THE PROBLEM FORCED LABOR SLAVERY

Labor trafficking in Southeast Asia and reports of slavery in supply chains are making international headlines. At the heart of the region, Cambodia is a source, transit and destination for forced labor slavery. Impoverished migrant workers are particularly vulnerable in a variety of industries, like fishing, domestic servitude, and child begging. After more than a decade successfully working alongside Cambodian authorities to combat child sex trafficking, IJM launched a new project in 2016 to combat forced labor slavery. The team has supported cases involving victims trafficked to China as brides and factory workers, women trafficked to Malaysia as maids, and men trafficked to Thailand's fishing industry.

JUSTICE FOR THE POOR IS POSSIBLE

When IJM started operations in Cambodia in the early 2000s, child sex trafficking was an epidemic. After a decade working alongside government officials and NGO partners, we witnessed an inspiring increase in the government's ability to fight the crime and a dramatic reduction of child sex trafficking.

The progress made so far in Cambodia shows that justice for the poor is possible when you invest in improving public justice systems.

How IJM Cambodia Combats Forced Labor Slavery

We rescue victims by partnering with authorities to identify and remove children or adults being exploited within Cambodia or trafficked across international borders.

We bring criminals to justice by pursuing cases against traffickers, slave holders and other criminals involved in recruiting, harboring or selling children, women and men into forced labor slavery.

We restore survivors by developing customized aftercare plans for clients and partnering with organizations in Cambodia that provide trauma counseling, safe shelter and vocational training or education.

We strengthen justice systems by leading anti-trafficking workshops for government officials and civil society organizations in provinces spanning the country. We will help develop nationwide police training curriculum so that all Cambodian law enforcement are equipped with the training and resources they need to combat labor trafficking.
